a. Fluorescence in situ hybridization

Fluorescence in situ hybridization

(FISH) is a DNA detection technique that combines fluorescently labeled

DNA probes with the microscopic visualization of DNA. Like other in situ hybridization methods, FISH uses fluorescent probes (the detectable molecules) to bind to nucleic acids in a non-permanent way. It involves steps that are similar to those of conventional cytogenetics, but using high resolution, epi-fluorescent microscopy instead of brightfield microscopy and more sensitive reagents.
