Requested time - No valid Validation Code You have to request validation code for Point of Sale from Intuit - . References Category:Software maintenanceQ: Best way to respond to a request for support I work for a non-profit that gets a lot of requests for support from local residents and our field staff. We have an established email account where folks can write and ask questions (with a person or phone number in the subject line). Often, the question isn't really a problem, or it's a problem that can be fixed within a few days by our staff. But, sometimes, the question is one that we've never heard of, and we have to look it up to understand what the real problem is. This can take hours, and hours of email correspondence with a non-native English speaker who is not really motivated to solve the problem. What is the best approach to responding to a request for support? A: You don't actually have to reply to every email - there's no law that says that. I once made a list of all the support issues that came in over a given month and marked them to be dealt with at the start of the following month. If someone emailed me later asking for a reply, I'd pull it off the list and deal with it myself. A: We do this too. I make a request for an email address of someone who needs help. Then when I get it I just send them the help request and never hear from them again. 1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a power-on reset circuit for a semiconductor integrated circuit. More particularly, the invention relates to a power-on reset circuit for a semiconductor integrated circuit, which can be driven at low voltage. 2. Description of the Related Art In general, an integrated circuit is reset at power-on by a power-on reset circuit. The power-on reset circuit controls a power-on reset signal generating circuit such that the power-on reset signal is outputted for a predetermined period of time at power-on, thereby resetting a plurality of circuits to an initial state. In general, a power-on reset circuit includes a power-on reset signal generating circuit, which generates a power-on reset signal after the power of a semiconductor integrated circuit is turned on, and a voltage control circuit, which controls a level of
