Category:Windows-only software Category:RAR softwareThe cardioprotective effects of liver-targeted overexpression of angiotensin II type-1 receptor are independent of the local renin-angiotensin system and compensatory effects of the angiotensin II type-2 receptor in the absence of the angiotensin II type-1 receptor. Previous studies have demonstrated that overexpression of the angiotensin II type-1 receptor (AT1R) in the liver attenuates ischemia/reperfusion injury in an animal model, the isolated perfused rat liver. In addition, we have demonstrated that targeted overexpression of AT1R in the liver protects against the chronic effects of angiotensin II. Therefore, this study was conducted to determine whether overexpression of the AT1R in the liver can prevent chronic angiotensin II-induced damage in the absence of the AT1R. The cardioprotective effects of the AT1R were examined by targeting the AT1R to the liver or by adenoviral overexpression of the AT1R in the liver. Overexpression of the AT1R in the liver protected against the chronic effects of angiotensin II. Adenoviral overexpression of the AT1R in the liver protected against chronic ischemia/reperfusion injury in wild-type rats. However, this cardioprotection was not observed in AT1R-deficient rats. Our findings suggest that there is a compensatory effect between the AT1R and AT2R in the absence of the AT1R. In addition, targeted overexpression of the AT1R in the liver effectively reduced the incidence of ischemia/reperfusion injury induced by clamping the right carotid artery for 90 min, and overexpression of the AT1R in the liver prevented acute renal failure induced by acute ischemia/reperfusion injury in the rat kidney. In conclusion, our findings suggest that overexpression of the AT1R in the liver can effectively protect against the chronic effects of angiotensin II, and overexpression of the AT1R in the liver has a protective effect against acute ischemia/reperfusion injury induced by clamping the right carotid artery and acute renal failure induced by clamping the right renal artery.> ba244e880a
