Managing the elderly on home visits: an instructional model for nursing service delivery. Assistance with personal and/or instrumental activities of daily living (ADLs and IADLs) are important activities for older adults in the community. Nurses visiting clients at home will encounter individuals with impairments in ADLs and IADLs. Eleven older adult models were trained to demonstrate various ADLs and IADLs during home visits with 10 interested clients. Six home visits were completed by the nurses. Nurse, client, and model member ratings of demonstrations of ADLs and IADLs were as accurate as the client and nurse ratings. The home visits by the nurses, however, were not as coordinated as the home visits by the models. The Instructional Model can be used in the community to increase the accuracy of client training.
