On March 8, the House Budget Committee is slated to begin a 2-day hearing on NASA's proposed FY 2014 spending level for the agency. Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison, R-Texas, chairs the committee and is one of the lead sponsors on the bill to authorize $19.2 billion in NASA spending for 2014. Hutchison's bill provides $19.3 billion for NASA's operating budget, an increase of $177 million from the $19.05 billion requested in the agency's budget. This increase would allow NASA to continue the Vision for Space Exploration program, which is the most expensive development program in the history of the U.S. space program. In other words, Hutchison would let NASA go ahead and continue developing spaceflight technology such as the Orion crew exploration vehicle and would allow the agency to continue flying the space shuttle and conducting other operations. Although some critics of the space program — including the president — are calling for canceling the Vision for Space Exploration, the money would allow NASA to continue pursuing the program. Hutchison's bill requires NASA to consolidate the jobs of the two contracting offices: In FY 2014, the consolidated organizations will be responsible for acquiring space launch vehicles, space exploration missions, and space operations. The agency also needs to consolidate the mission directorates. Hutchison's bill would cut NASA's workforce by nearly a
