Fifty-eight out of 109 HLA-B locus alloantigens and 28 out of 36 HLA-A locus alloantigens, including B-B, Bw4, Bw6, Bw8, Bx, Cw1, Cw2, Cw3, Cw6, Cw8 and Cw11 antigens, are presented here in terms of their allele frequencies, Hardy-Weinberg equilibrium, parental transmission, and distribution between parents and their offspring (N = 5,000). For almost all of the antigens presented, the allele frequencies were compatible with Hardy-Weinberg equilibrium. Additionally, the distribution of antigens in offspring of parents is presented. We present, for the first time, an extensive genotyping panel of antigens determined by genotypes. In our study, it was observed that HLA-B8 is related to a higher number of pregnancies in the offspring of B8 fathers and the B8 antigen increased in population and decreased in an individual, and this result is in agreement with the literature. Although some diseases and cancers are associated with certain alloantigens, we cannot assume that all of the diseases/conditions listed have a genetic etiology or they can be explained with a genotype-phenotype association. To understand the variation in the global frequencies of alloantigens in different geographical locations, population and ethnicity, histocompatibility antigen frequencies and their genotyping associations should be determined in a large number of samples. Although, the HLA genes are located in the class II region of the major histocompatibility complex (MHC), they are part of a highly polymorphic region that has an impact on the evolution and the development of various clinical disorders.
