A handy tool to highlight specific text and format it for email. You can copy or insert text anywhere on the screen and/or into any program (not just into Microsoft Word) and even save your results to a file. Keys is easy to use, but you can also customize it to create macros that will be easy to launch and use. The main window displays several options: left, right, top and bottom margins, font family, font style and size, paragraph spacing and text alignment. On the right, you can add up to five individual macros with their own keyboard shortcuts. These are the ones used when you start them. However, you can also customize your macros any way you like. Besides, we strongly advise you to organize your macros into groups and add only the ones you use often. This way, you won't have to waste time searching for what you're looking for, and the other ones will stay in their hidden group until you need them. Next to the current selection, you can add more text and format it with any of the settings available. You can even add and format entire documents, although this is a bit difficult to do. In the lower left corner of the window, you'll find a clipboard icon. This is the only place you can copy your results. Once you're done with the text formatting, you can click the Export button to create a batch file with all your settings. You can also save it to a file, but this will only contain the results you've created. To view the active settings for any selected text, click the Properties button. Here, you can format the active text with the settings you have active. You can also create a copy and paste and format the copy in any way you want. WEB-LINUX Description: This is another one of the less known, more powerful and free Linux utility tools that you can use to format text, highlight or copy it and save the results to a text file. You don't need to have any programming or scripting skills to be able to use the WEB-LINUX program, as it's fairly easy to use. Just type the text or highlight it with any of the tools available and press the Copy button to start saving it. The settings window appears, and you can choose from the available options: left, right, top, bottom and center margins, 1d6a3396d6
