One of our developers needs to check his code into the repository, however Checkstyle generates reports on his code that the developer cannot open or download. I don't want to include the whole Jenkins job in his -/checkstyle/checkstyle.xml file, as it's too big and I don't want to confuse him. I want to tell Jenkins to run "ant checkstyle" everytime the dev pushes a change to the repository, so that we can get the reports from the Checkstyle/Ant process, instead of the developer. Is it possible? A: It doesn't sound like your Jenkins server is running as a service and that your developer is trying to push changes to your Jenkins server on their laptop. You're better off just having Jenkins run the Ant build. You can configure Jenkins to do this by setting up a job configuration with the Build Once/Install Plugin and using the Execute shell action. You can also use the configure page to set up Execute shell actions. There you can configure a script to be invoked at the start of each build, e.g. ant -f ${WORKSPACE}/checkstyle.xml and then setup a post build action that downloads the latest checkstyle report with this script wget -O checkstyle.xml "${CHECKSTYLE_URL}" and uploads this to your Jenkins instance. You'll need to configure your Ant build to override the Checkstyle ant task, so that this script runs first.
