Allergic reactions to latex sensitization may be life-threatening. The present study was undertaken to compare the usefulness of the allergic skin test and the basophil histamine release test for the identification of latex allergy. The patients with a history of immediate-type reactions to latex, who were found to have positive latex-specific IgE, were divided into 4 groups. Blood samples were taken at the time of the provocation test. Group A consisted of 3 patients with a history of multiple immediate reactions. A latex-specific intradermal test was positive in these 3 patients, and when intradermal tests to latex were done at 1, 2, and 3 weeks, reactivity was found in 1 patient. In all 3 patients, a basophil histamine release test was negative. Group B consisted of 9 patients with a history of few repeated reactions. The latex-specific intradermal test was negative in these 9 patients, and when intradermal tests to latex were performed at 1, 2, and 3 weeks, no reactivity was found in any of these patients. In all but 1 patient, basophil histamine release tests were positive. Group C consisted of 10 patients with a history of repeated or repeated and severe immediate reactions. The latex-specific intradermal test was positive in all 10 patients, and when intradermal tests to latex were performed at 1, 2, and 3 weeks, all patients showed positive reactions. In all 10 patients, basophil histamine release tests were also positive. The latex-specific intradermal test is more sensitive than basophil histamine release test for the diagnosis of immediate latex allergy. The basophil histamine release test should be done when the latex-specific intradermal test is negative.Sunday, September 12, 2008 Good Times. Here we go again. Crazy ass bird. Mama moth and her babies. These mothings happen every fall. My little house flies hatch every year. The local media likes to outdo each other
