Went to the Tranquility site, and clicked on the link to install, but there is a fail box. I'm on firefox 19.0.2 on a windows 7 box. Any ideas? Here's how I'm installing the add-on: - click the "Add to firefox" link - select "show add-ons available" - scroll down to "Tranquility Reader" and click on the "Install" button. - it prompts me to download a file from the Tranquility site, so I download it, it then starts installing. Here's the problem: - I open a new tab in firefox, and click on the link to Tranquility Reader. - I get a red x mark on the top left corner of my page, as if I'm about to download something. The link says: "We're sorry, you were directed to a page that is no longer available. The page might have been removed, possibly through an update. We may be able to help you find a newer version if you provide the URL below." - I see this url in the red x mark: " is what the installer says should appear in my add-ons. Please help. I have no idea what's going on, and would like to be able to use this add-on. I don't want to have to use safari, or IE to read the content. Thank you, rscruzetti, for your reply. I'm going to have to leave this add-on alone for now, as I can't see any change in the functionality or lack thereof. I am also running the latest version of firefox and the latest version of Tranquility Reader. I'm going to have to leave this add-on alone for now, as I can't see any change in the functionality or lack thereof. Click the add-on in the firefox
