_Figure 11-11: With a little experience, you can create and edit your own images from the ground up. Even the most amateur photographer can accomplish great effects by using layers to create and manipulate complex layers, using masks, blend modes, and opacity to create professional-looking effects._ Image 1 is a photo of my 7-year-old daughter. I cropped it to remove the surrounding objects, placed a layer mask on the image, added some layer effects and shadows, and used a color overlay to lighten the shadows and blemishes. Layer blend mode and color overlay. Image 4 The image on the left shows the original photo, with the mask and background color overlaid to make the portion of the image a darker green. I then placed a layer of a combination of the original photo (now a greenish tone) and the mask (now a blackish tone) over the photo, leaving a white highlight under the girl's face. Image 5 * **Image 6:**
Create a black and white layer and layer mask. Image 6 Image 7 shows the effects of removing the background and applying a layer mask to the layer in the process. I then overlaid the layer with a shape using a brush containing a black-and-white pattern in a grayscale color in a larger version of the shape. I also used a linear gradient to make the black-and-white pattern transparent. Image 7 * * * **F IGURE 11-12:**

Close Search Q: Get absolute path from controller/action in nested ngrx app I have been trying to fetch paths from nested NGRX store, but it always returns null or an empty string. Simplified and trimmed down version of my store: export class AppState { protected actions: FetchData= ['HOME/', 'LOGIN/', 'SIGNUP/', 'FAILED/', 'FAILED_'][AuthService.authenticationType] public readonly fetchData$ = this.actions.pipe( ofType(this.fetchData), withLatestFrom(this.store.pipe(select('auth')), this.store.pipe(select(SelectAuthenticationTypes))) ) constructor(private store: Store) { } public authenticationType: string = AuthService.authenticationType; } which can be called with: this.store.dispatch(new AppState.FetchData('LOGIN')); And in the component: fetchData$ = this.store

What's New In?

The 33-year-old started by pointing to staff who were "puncturing" the employees, which "means they are injecting drugs into [the] patients' bodies" and had them "smelling drugs and finding drugs". The controversy comes just days after a coroner ruled a patient in a Adelaide hospital died from a "traumatic" rectal tear. The coroner found the woman was hospitalised in January 2011, when she was left to lie on a bed with searing pain in her stomach. She was diagnosed with a ruptured rectum, rectal tear, vaginal tear and lots of blood in her stool. Paramedic Tony Hickey was there when the patient was moved to the Intensive Care Unit where she was given 20 milligrams of morphine, Hickey told the inquest. The patient was later transferred to the toilet, where she was made to sit and sit and sit. "Because she had such strong abdominal pain, she became quite distressed and complained of constipation and requested to be moved to the toilet," Hickey said. "She was moved to the toilet, put in a semi-sitting position and asked to sit and sit and sit and sit, to no avail. "She was only sitting for about 10 seconds and then began to complain of discomfort. "And it was during this time that, during this process, she became distressed and could be heard repeatedly screaming." A doctor called a consultant surgeon, who was notified that the patient's rectum was torn, Hickey said. Mr Hickey told the inquest the surgeon, who was on the ward, was "furious" and told Hickey to "get that patient out of here and give her a blood transfusion". Hickey said he intervened in the transfer and decided to give the patient an enema. The surgeon then "got quite agitated" and said the procedure could wait until morning, the paramedic told the inquest. But Hickey said he did not wait because he wanted to give the patient an enema "as it was requested". The patient then began to throw up and was eventually transferred to the Intensive Care Unit. Mr Hickey said the patient was heavily sedated during the process and "even in her comatose state she could be heard moaning in pain". He said the patient had a "traumatic wound that was resistant to fluid resuscitation
