As Prince Charles has got into a few scrapes over the years (mostly involving the Murdoch media) and as the fallout from the News of the World phone hacking scandal has begun to take its toll, many articles have been written about the Prince's affinity for the tabloid press, and particularly, his strange and persistent flirtation with Rupert Murdoch's empire. The issue has been traced back to the Prince's childhood at Oxford, particularly when he was a student at St. Edward's College, and to one of the family's relationships with the Daily Mirror, which William's father, Lord Snowdon, edited. Snowdon had a reputation for being a fine sportsman and very much on the social side of things, and was therefore well connected with the aristocracy and the movers and shakers of the day. Snowdon was also intimate with the famous Daily Mirror journalist Harold 'Jimmy' Goldsmith, who was a friend of Lord Rosebery and a confidant of the Marquess of Salisbury. In fact, the connection of Prince Charles with the Mirror and its proprietor, Lord Beaverbrook, began in 1948, when he was elected Rector of St. Edward's College, where he became close friends with Lord Beaverbrook's daughter, Princess Marina. So there is a family connection there that began around the time of the Prince's teens. It is notable that William's grandmother, the Duchess of York, had worked as a Mirror journalist before Prince Charles's birth, and used to frequently read the paper to her son, and that William spent a period at school living near the Mirror building. So how much does Charles like the tabloid press and how does he find it? It is very clear from his personal correspondence and research that he does like to read it, and it certainly appears that he is well read, and understands and reads newspapers in a way that many members of his Royal Family do not. Charles has the knack of picking up arcane and amusing quotes and observations from newspapers, and readers of his articles will see evidence of this everywhere. This is why he is one of the most-quoted interviewers in the world, and the free-ranging, off-the-cuff answers he occasionally gives are very much the mark of a social journalist of the day. However, his relationship with the Daily Mail is, to say the least, the most interesting in terms of his rapport with the press. Charles's chatty correspondence with the Daily Mail from 1978-1988 was sold to the Today

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) -- Virginia officials say a driver has hit a police cruiser in Alexandria, injuring four officers. Police say the driver struck the officers' cruisers around 3:30 p.m. Sunday in the parking lot at Lake Fairfax Park. They say the driver didn't stop after hitting the cruisers and continued driving. The officers' injuries aren't considered life-threatening. One officer was taken to the hospital for evaluation, and three others were checked at the scene by a hospital ambulance. All are police officers, the department says. Local media outlets report that alcohol is suspected as the cause of the crash. Police did not immediately confirm that but say all drivers involved were under the influence. The crash happened in a busy area of Alexandria with businesses and schools nearby.FX, News, Web Images.
