Designing For HyperMotion The goal of HyperMotion technology is to make the gameplay on the field natural and authentic. It allows us to have a player - as he would really move in the game - getting faster, more balanced, more accurate, reacting more nimbly and intuitively to on-field actions. In addition, the player will be able to feel what is being attempted in real-time, and will respond to situations at full speed. For example, a player will be able to feel more comfortable when approaching a free-kick from short distance. Of course, the implementation of HyperMotion technology requires a certain level of technical expertise to create a proper match. HyperMotion is not a new concept: it is used in many online multi-player and single-player video games, with achievements such as Fifa Online 2, FIFA Street, F1 2010, Army Men, etc. In these games, movements are recorded at a very high level of accuracy, and the resulting data is processed to create a tailored game experience for players. FIFA has been developing its own version of this technology for several years, for use in the FIFA Ultimate Team mode, plus other special features.

The last two years have been very significant for the development of this game's HyperMotion technology, and a significant amount of time has been invested in enhancing the results. This has included extensive testing, analysis, motion capture sessions, and optimization of our data storage system. The required amount of data collected from real-life players is huge, and the storage system on the server-side was also a challenge. For data to be valid, detailed and reliable, it has to be stored in a very professional manner. To ensure a high-quality product, FIFA has a strict workflow for managing this data, and this has resulted in a high degree of quality and consistency to the motion capture data. We are therefore in a position to make our product even more accurate and authentic than ever before. Athletic Traits As real-life players, players will have their own individualistic nature of movement and play style. These traits need to be captured, interpreted and implemented. In doing so, EA wanted to ensure that the controls would accurately reflect the varying movements of footballers. The detail is important. Even in a match, players do not always pass the ball straight in front of them. Sometimes, they can

- FIFA "eSport"-inspired "Deep Learning" AI routines are more flexible and intelligent than ever. They've taken new cues from the hundreds of challenges we've seen over the past few years - they can now react more accurately in the attacking and defensive third, making it more challenging and fun than ever.

- Unique game moments that happen to your team. Play a match with two teams, and your team will see moments from the other match. Play a match and have a coin toss that decides the order of the game.
- Players now engage more naturally on the ball, and more transitions are achieved with the pitch flat as your player spins in the air or dives and runs off his own line.
- The effectiveness of one player's movement has also been greatly increased. If your player has a good run, it now takes him a lot further than in previous versions. At the same time, it's now much easier to predict the path your player's movement will take.
- In addition to classic licensed competitions and leagues, FIFA now offers an array of specially-designed competitions. These aren't just tailored to your favorite leagues, but also include a range of themes that capture the spirit of other sports or cultures.
- And now your FIFA Ultimate Team can feature your favorite players from around the world. Are you a Real Madrid fan? Earn glory as a Spanish midfielder, and climb to the summit with an array of Spanish talent.
